

I had some small tasks remaining and used this free hour to complete some of them.

One of them was torqueing the bolts on the forward wing tank attack bracket to fuselage.

insid view of the tank bracket attach point

Next I started playing around with some carton boxes representing different instruments and components for the elextical system behind the cockpit panel in order to be able to visualize how much room there will be.

